DIE MANNSCHAFT FAILED TO CLEAR THE GROUP STAGE IN 2022

Germany's quest to reclaim tournament dominance

SANDIP G New Jersey, June 19

IN THE GERMAN pubs in New York, the frenzy has already frothed up. At Berlin NYC near Grand Central, the manager promises beer at a discounted rate for anyone who could name all the four captains that had won Germany the World Cups. "Germans don't need any discount for beer! I am sure, but we need our fans to be supercharged for the World Cup," says Matthias Weber, the manager.

Germany defeated Curacao 7-1 in their opening match

His spot is decked with German flags and football crests. He would paste a few posters of the legends before the fans started pouring in for the game against Ecuador on June 25, after the second against Ivory Coast.

have always struck. Joachim Loew was always likened to the then-chancellor Angela Merkel, who religiously attended every big game of her country. Coincidentally, they left the office to on the same year, 2021.

Germany is going through a cultural transition with multiculturalism at its forefront. Out of the 26 in the squad, 12 have immigrant backgrounds. The fans have more sporting reasons to worry. They bemoan the absence of a leader. Embodied by the legendary Franz Beckenbauer, passed out in 1984, Loew was a mouthwatering group capable of dismantling defenses. "Just bring the Cup back!" Matthias says. Just by 'Turnier-mannschaft' again.

when he was labelled the next Toni Kroos, but he plateaued. A trustworthy passer and ball circulator, he is heretofore of the command and form legends seated. Goalkeeper Manuel Neuer is certainly one that breathes command, but his declining reflexes and proneness to blunder has pushed him into the heart of another debate. Two old guards have already retired—Kroos and Ilkay Gundogan—but the manager, the criticism goes, has been unable to assimilate new players to function in his system. Talents have surged, Florian Grillitsch and Jamal Musiala, but both are wildly inconsistent. Glorious one day banal the other.

Their next adversaries, Ivory Coast, are not among the elites, but their slippery forwards could trouble Germany's makeshift backline. Like in the Curacao game, Germany would over-rely on their forward quartet Kai Havertz, Florian Grillitsch, Leroy Sané and Musiala. In their style, they are a mouthwatering group capable of dismantling defenses. "Just bring the Cup back!" Matthias says. Just by 'Turnier-mannschaft' again.

World Cup 2026

A team defined by their knack of winning reaching the fag end of tournaments. Group exists in 2022 World Cup, premature outsiders in Europe have denuded their image. Reform and redemptions are the watchwords for the Germans, from fans to press, players to support staff into every sentence.

ROHIT CHAWLA, SIFAT KHURANA, VIMAL BHOLA: CO-FOUNDERS, INNOVIST

Repeat success

AFTER THE MAN COMPANY, THE TRIO SPOTTED A SECOND SHIFT IN CONSUMER BEHAVIOUR, BUILDING SCIENCE AND TRUST INTO A ₹4,000-CR BEAUTY COMPANY

VIVEK SUSAN PINTO
MOST ENTREPRENEURS spend years chasing a single breakthrough. Rohit Chawla, Sifat Khurana and Vimal Bhola, co-founders of direct-to-consumer beauty startup Innovist, have built two.

The trio first made their mark with The Man Company, a pioneer in India's premium men's grooming market. A decade later, they have repeated the feat with Innovist, a science-led beauty and personal care company that has attracted a majority investment from L'Oréal in a deal valued at around ₹4,000 crore.

ing more informed, more discerning and increasingly interested in what was inside a product rather than merely what appeared on its packaging. In 2018, the three launched Innovist, originally known as Onesto Labs. Their premise was simple but ambitious: build a new generation of personal care brands centred on science, transparency and performance.

chief marketing officer, became the bridge between science and consumers. In a sector crowded with exaggerated claims, she helped create brands that educated rather than merely advertised. Her approach translated complex conversations around ingredients, formulations and efficacy into accessible narratives that resonated with a generation of digitally savvy consumers seeking transparency and trust.

Unlike many consumer startups that prioritise speed to market, the founders spent nearly a year investing in research, formulations and manufacturing capabilities before launching Bare Anatomy in 2019. The decision reflected the complementary strengths that have made the partnership effective. As founder and chief executive officer, Rohit Chawla became the strategist and builder. With a background in management consulting and a proven track record in consumer businesses, he championed a model built around problem-solution brands and scientific credibility rather than broad lifestyle positioning.

Vimal Bhola, co-founder and chief R&D scientist, provided the scientific engine. With deep expertise in formulation science and product development, he helped build the in-house research capabilities that became Innovist's defining advantage. At a time when much of the industry still relied heavily on marketing-led differentiation, Innovist invested in laboratories, testing and evidence-led innovation.

Together, the founders built a portfolio designed around specialised consumer needs rather than a one-size-fits-all approach. For many entrepreneurs, that would have been the destination. For Chawla, Khurana and Bhola, it was only the beginning. Their experience revealed a deeper transformation underway. Indian consumers were becoming more informed, more discerning and increasingly interested in what was inside a product rather than merely what appeared on its packaging.
